Stress Management - I

- Day Camp is a long week! You will walk many miles a day, sometimes in the blazing heat! It will be important for you to continually evaluate your stress level.
  - First and foremost, NEVER be ashamed to admit you need a break.
  - If you find you are "on your last nerve", please contact a member of the Day Camp Staff immediately. We will gladly take over your den (or station) responsibilities and give you a breather.
  - NEVER walk away from your den and leave the boys unattended.
  - NEVER wait until you "lose your cool" to ask for a break. This makes it a negative experience for everyone.
  - REMEMBER THIS: It is okay to ask for help!!!

May 31, 2008

2008 Cub Scout Day Camp Orientation

32

Stress Management - II

- Methods for dealing with stress:
  - Build teamwork! Recognize that we are a group of people from widely differing backgrounds offering our time and talents for a common purpose. Show your colleagues that they can count on your help.
  - Work out a schedule with your team so that each individual can take part of each day away from the campers to tend to personal needs, but NEVER walk away from your den and leave the boys without 2-deep leadership.
  - Practice relaxation techniques: find a time and place to rest, take several deep breaths and exhale slowly, and release the tension in your body.

May 31, 2008

2008 Cub Scout Day Camp Orientation

33

Stress Management - III

- If you see another den leader or adult volunteer who is suffering from stress overload, please do the following:
  - DO NOT confront the adult yourself.
  - We do not want to pit den leader against den leader, den leader against station leader, etc.
  - Contact a member of the Day Camp Staff immediately who will evaluate the situation.

Remember! The boys are there to have fun!
They cannot have fun if you do not have fun.
